

Ellen M. Blalock / The Post-Standard

COLORFUL COVER: This is what a gas station looks like after artists from across Central New York and around the world decided to work together. Jennifer Marsh, a Syracuse University graduate student and the founder of the International Fiber Collaborative, collected 3,400 fabric panels to wrap the vacant gas station at Nottingham Road and East Colvin Street in DeWitt. She received fabric pieces from all over the world for the World Reclamation Art Project, or WRAP. Many used recycled materials. There will be a public reception from 5 to 8 p.m. May 3 at the wrapped station to meet Marsh and many of the folks who made panels for the project. For a video and more photos about Marsh and her work go to: <http://blog.syracuse.com/indepth/>