The Dream Rocket

A Public Art Collaborative – on a Global scale.....
Is happening in Huntsville, Alabama in 2010

In May & June of 2010, the 363' vertical Saturn V Rocket replica, located in front of the U.S. Space and Rocket Center (Huntsville, Alabama), will be fully wrapped with a giant 30,467 square foot 'dream quilt'. Included in this public art WRAP will be approximately 8,000 panels made from students and individuals from over 100 countries. This community-based endeavor will likely be the largest collaborative art project ever accomplished. Not only will this wrap embody the Power of a Global Collaborative, but it will hold the individual Dreams for a better tomorrow. Dream themes include health, energy, peace, technology, science, and space.

Jennifer Marsh, Assistant Professor of Sculpture at University of Alabama in Huntsville & Director of The Dream Rocket, is inspiring a new generation to believe that any dream is possible,

“We want people all over the world to dream those audacious dreams, and inspire them to make their dreams come true,” said Dream Rocket Director Jennifer Marsh. “The Dream Rocket represents the dreams of individuals around the world, and embraces the power of global collaboration.”

Marsh chose the mighty Saturn V because it is an icon of the great dream of the 20th century - to reach out beyond our borders and land a man on the moon. A grand celebration of the project will be held during the 60 day installation.

“The Saturn V Moon Rocket is the ideal example of achieving a dream that seems impossible,” said Marsh. “Whether your dream is curing cancer, going to Mars, or ending world hunger, the Saturn V is an inspiring visual reminder that any dream can come true. If we can work together to put a man on the moon, we can do anything.”

The Dream Rocket is a part of the International Fiber Collaborative, a global initiative that gives people the opportunity to collaborate with other communities and countries worldwide on a single mission. Marsh has directed two previous collaborative art projects, and is considered one of the leading figures in collaborative public art.
